Many in each region passing fair
As the noon sky; more like to goddesses
Than mortal creatures. Milton's Paradise Lost.
She was not only passing fair,
But was withal discreet and debonaire. Dryden.
While thus we stood as in a froud,
Full soon by bonfire and by bell,
We learnt our liege was passing well. Gay.
PASSINGBELL. n. f. [passing and bell.] The bell which rings at the hour of departure, to obtain prayers for the passing soul:
it is often used for the bell, which rings immediately after death.

Those loving papers,
Thicken on you now, as pray'rs ascend
To heaven in troops at a good man's passingbell. Downe.
A talk of tumult, and a breath
Would serve him as his passingbell to death. Daniel.
Before the passingbell begun,
The news through half the town has run. Swift.
PASSION. n. f. [passion, French; passio, Latin.]
1. Any effect caused by external agency.
The differences of mouldable and not mouldable, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter are plebeian notions, applied to the instruments men ordinarily practise. Bacon.
A body at rest affords us no idea of any active power to move, and when, set in motion, it is rather a passion than an action in it. Locke.
2. Violent commotion of the mind.
All the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts and rash embrac'd despair. Shakefp.
Thee every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep: whose every passion fully strives
To make itself in thee fair and admired. Shakespeare.
Vex'd I am
Of late, with passions of some difference. Shakespeare.
I am doubtful, left
You break into some merry passion,
And so offend him:
If you should smile, he grows impatient.
In loving thou do'st well, in passion not;
Wherein true love consists not. Milton's Par. Lost.
Cruel his eye, but cast
Signs of remorse and passion, to behold
The fellows of his crime condemn'd
For ever now to have their lot in pain. Milton's Par. Lost.
Passion's too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.
All the art of rhetoric, besides order and perspicuity, only moves the passions, and thereby misleads the judgment. Locke.
3. Anger.
The word passion signifies the receiving any action in a large philosophical sense; in a more limited philosophical sense, it signifies any of the affections of human nature; as love, fear, joy, sorrow: but the common people confine it only to anger. Watts.
4. Zeal; ardour.
Where statesmen are ruled by faction and interest, they can have no passion for the glory of their country, nor any concern for the figure it will make. Addison on Medals.
5. Love.
For your love,
You kill'd her father: you confest'd you drew
A mighty argument to prove your passion for the daughter.
He, to grate me more,
Publickly own'd his passion for Ametriss. Rowe.
Survey yourself, and then forgive your slave,
Think what a passion such a form must have. Granvil.
6. Eagerness.
Abate a little of that violent passion for fine cloaths, so predominant in your sex. Swift.
7. Emphatically. The last suffering of the redeemer of the world.
He shew'd himself alive after his passion, by many infallible proofs. Acts i. 3.
To PASSION. v. n. [passionner, Fr. from the noun.] To be extremely agitated; to express great commotion of mind.
Obsolete.

'Twas Ariadne passioning
For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight. Shakespeare.
PASSION-FLOWER. n. f. [peranadilla, Latin.] Passion-flower hath a double calyx, the first consisting of three leaves, the other five, which expand in form of a star: the flowers consist of five leaves each, and are of a rofaceous form: in the centre of the flower arises the pointal, with a crown fringed at the bottom, but furnished with a tender embryo at the top, on which stand three clubs, under which are the stamina, with rough obtuse apices, which always incline downward; the embryo turns to an oval or globular fruit, fleshy, and consisting of one cell, which is full of seeds adhering to the sides, and covered with a sort of hood or veil. Miller.

PASSION-WEEK. n. f. The week immediately preceding Easter, named in commemoration of our Saviour's crucifixion.
PASSIONATE. adj. [passionné, French.]
1. Moved by passion; causing or expressing great commotion of mind.
My whole endeavour is to resolve the conscience, and to shew what, in this controversy, the heart is to think, if it will follow the light of sound and sincere judgment, without either cloud of prejudice or mist of passionate affection. Hosker.
They observe, that men are much more passionate for injustice than for violence; because the one coming as from an equal seems rapine; when the other proceeding from one stronger is but the effect of necessity. Clarendon.
Good angels looked upon this ship of Noah's with a passionate concern for its safety. Burnet.
Men, upon the near approach of death, have been roused up into such a lively sense of their guilt, such a passionate degree of concern and remorse, that, if ten thousand ghosts had appeared to them, they scarce could have had a fuller conviction of their danger. Atterbury's Sermon.
2. Easily moved to anger.
Homer's Achilles is haughty and passionate, impatient of any restraint by laws, and arrogant in arms. Prior.
To PASSIONATE. v. a. [from passion.] An old word. Obsolete.
1. To affect with passion.
Great pleasure mix'd with piteous regard,
That godly king and queen did passionate,
Whilist they his piteous adventures heard. Fairy Queen.
2. To express passionately.
Thy niece and I want hands,
And cannot passionate our tenfold grief
With folded arms. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.
PASSIONATELY. adv. [from passionate.]
1. With passion; with desire, love or hatred; with great commotion of mind.
Whoever passionately covets any thing he has not, has lost his hold. L'Estrange.
If sorrow expresses itself never so loudly and passionately, and discharge itself in never so many tears, yet it will no more purge a man's heart, than the washing of his hands can cleanse the rottenness of his bones. South's Sermon.
I made Melchinda, in opposition to Nourmahal, a woman passionately loving of her husband, patient of injuries and contempt, and constant in her kindness. Dryden.
2. Angrily.
They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.
PASSIONATENESS. n. f. [from passionate.]
1. State of being subject to passion.
2. Vehemence of mind.
To love with some passionateness the person you would marry, is not only allowable but expedient. Boyle.
PASSIVE. adj. [passif, French; passivus, Latin.]
1. Receiving impression from some external agent.
High above the ground
Their march was, and the passive air upbore
Their nimble tread. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The active informations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like form closing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.
As the mind is wholly passive in the reception of all its simple ideas, so it exerts several acts of its own, whereby, out of its simple ideas, the other is formed. Locke.
The vis inertiae is a passive principle by which bodies persist in their motion or rest, receive motion in proportion to the force impressing it, and resist as much as they are resisted:
by this principle alone, there never could have been any motion in the world. Newton's Opticks.
2. Unresisting; not opposing.
Not those alone, who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause. Dunciad.
3. Suffering; not acting.
[In grammar.]
A verb passive is that which signifies passion or the effect of action: as, docer, I am taught. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
PASSIVELY. adv. [from passive.] With a passive nature.
Though some are passively inclin'd,
The greater part degenerate from their kind. Dryden.
PASSIVENESS. n. f. [from passive.]
1. Quality of receiving impression from external agents.
2. Passibility; power of suffering.
We shall lose our passiveness with our being, and be as incapable of suffering as heaven can make us. Decay of Piety.
PASSIVITY. n. f. [from passive.] Passiveness. An innovated word.
There being no mean between penetrability and impenetrability, between passivity and activity, these being contrary and opposite, the infinite rarefaction of the one quality is the position of its contrary. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
PASSOVER.

PASSOVER. n. f. [pasch and over.]
1. A feast instituted among the Jews in memory of the time when God, smiting the first-born of the Egyptians, passed over the habitations of the Hebrews.
The Jews passover was at hand, and Jesus went up. Jo. ii. 13.
The Lord's passover, commonly called Easter, was ordered by the common law to be celebrated every year on a Sunday. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. The sacrifice killed.
Take a lamb, and kill the passover. Exodus xii. 21.
PASSPORT. n. f. [passport, Fr.] Permission of egress.
Under that pretext, fain the would have given a secret passport to her affection. Sidney.
Giving his reason passport for to pass
Whither it would, so it would let him die. Sidney.
Let him depart; his passport shall be made,
And crowns for convey put into his purse. Shakespeare.
Having used extreme caution in granting passports to Ireland, he conceived that paper not to have been delivered. Clar.
The gospel has then only a free admission into the assent of the understanding, when it brings a passport from a rightly disposed will, as being the faculty of dominion, that commands all, that shuts out, and lets in, what objects it pleases. South's Sermons.
Admitted in the shining throng,
He shows the passport which he brought along;
His passport is his innocence and grace,
Well known to all the natives of the place. Dryden.
At our meeting in another world;
For thou hast drunk thy passport out of this. Dryden.
PAST. participial adj. [from pass.]
1. Not present; not to come.

Prostitute our past cure malady
To empiricks. Shakespeare's All's well that ends well.
What's gone, and what's past help,
Should be past grief. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Many men have not yet finned themselves past all sense or feeling, but have some regrets; and when their spirits are at any time disturbed with the sense of their guilt, they are for a little time more watchful over their ways; but they are soon disheartened. Calamy's Sermons.
Love, when once past government, is consequently past shame. L'Estrange.
Her life she might have had; but the despair
Of saving his, had put it past her care.
I'm stupify'd with sorrow; past relief
Of tears. Dryden.
That the bare receiving a sum should sink a man into a servile state, is past my comprehension. Collier on Pride.
That he means paternal power, is past doubt from the inference he makes. Locke.

from the ground. Bacon.
PASTE. n. f. [paste, French.]
1. Any thing mixed up so as to be viscous and tenacious: such as flour and water for bread or pies; or various kinds of earth mingled for the potter.
Except you could bray Christendom in a mortar, and mould it into a new paste, there is no possibility of an holy war. Bacon's Holy War.
With particles of heavenly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Which wise Prometheus temper'd into paste,
And, mixt with living dreams, the godlike image cast. Dryd.

PAS

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands. Dryden.
He has the whitest hand that ever you saw, and raises paste better than any woman. Addison's Spectator, N° 482.

pasterns. Shakespeare's Henry V.
The colt that for a stallion is design'd,
Upright he walks on pasterns firm and straight,
His motions easy, prancing in his gait. Dryden.
Being heavy, he should not tread stiff, but have a pastern made him, to break the force of his weight: by this his body hangs on the hoof, as a coach doth by the leathers. Grew.
2. The legs of an human creature in contempt.
So straight the walk'd, and on her pasterns high:
If seeing her behind, he lik'd her pace,
Now turning short, he better lik'd her face. Dryden.
PASTILL. n. f. [pastillus, Lat. pastille, Fr.] A roll of paste.
To draw with dry colours, make long pastills, by grinding red led with strong wort, and so roll them up like pencils, drying them in the sun. Peascham on Drawing.
PASTIME. n. f. [pas and time.] Sport; amusement; diversion.
It was more requisite for Zelmane's hurt to rest, than sit up at those pastimes; but she, that felt no wound but one, earnestly desired to have the pastorals. Sidney, b. i.
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream;
And make a pastime of each weary step,
'Till the last step has brought me to my love. Shakefp.
Pastime passing excellent;
If husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.
With these Find pastime, and bear rule; thy realm is large. Milton.
A man, much addicted to luxury, recreation and pastime, should never pretend to devote himself entirely to the sciences;
unless his soul be so refined, that he can taste these entertainments eminently in his closet. Watts.
PASTOR. n. f. [pastor, Latin; pasteur, old French.]
1. A shepherd.

The pipe on which the Aescraean pastor play'd. Dryden.
The pastor shears their hoary beards,
And eates of their hair the loaden herds. Dryden.
2. A clergyman who has the care of a flock; one who has souls to feed with sound doctrine.
The pastor maketh suits of the people, and they with one voice testify a general assent therunto, or he joyfully beginneth, and they with like alacrity follow, dividing between the sentences wherewith they strive, which shall much shew his own, and stir up others zeal to the glory of God. Hooker, b. v. f. 39.
The first branch of the great work belonging to a pastor of the church, was to teach. South's Sermons.
A breach in the general form of worship was reckoned too unpopular to be attempted, neither was the expedient then found out of maintaining separate pastors out of private purses. Swift.
